that live here in the US".

that pretty much stands nicely by itself.

your argueing against things i havent even said. youre argueing against what you believe is my picture of the US, even though i explicitly stated the exact opposite (that i find both the selfish socialist europe and the evil america clichee ridiculous, its down there in my post, maybe you should actually go forward and try to READ it).

youre in full auto-argueing-mode, serving some standard "antiliberal" phrases that dont have anything to do with what i said, on the contrary, its the discussion i again explicitly mentioned as a useless discussion that leads nowhere and will always be based on speculation on all sides.

i am NOT

the standard discussion target that wants to debate whether george bush is evil or whatever - its again all down there in the post. im not interested in that. i didnt even write a single word about that in my initial post, you brought the assumption up that i might be "one of those" (TM) who thinks that george bush and with him the entire USA is eeeeeeeevil. im not.

i made my point about what i think about your euro stereotype BS and how justified it is or not (thats some "non-non-judgmentalism" right there for you). i noted to you that there is a difference between i.e. a handful of italians living in the US and the country italia with its citicens, that one cant judge one by the other.

you can acknowledge that or not, your choice.

if you want an iraq-related discussion (again something you brought up), i inform you that the only discussion i am interested in is the basic discus
