esus was. You can't tell me I'm "utterly wrong ahhh. ok I get it. You prefer to believe in human-made faiths. This is of course, at root, atheism.

Christians believe that Jesus was who he said he was and the Bible, (not in word, but in thought) is the word of God. Miraculous, supernatural and divine.

That's your choice to believe that, no one can know, but there certainly is reason to believe otherwise.

When you tell me that no one can know who Jesus was you are expressing your own belief, not fact. I can show you otherwise.

>I believe he was a man trying to teach us how we should live, >you believe he was God. Fine. And I don't quote him when it suits me >anymore than you do.

I take him for who he said he was, and that points the finger back at

in the past as they do today, and Jesus' death and resurrection are human myths created, as all "god talk" is, by humans to comfort themselves...

You may not be an atheist, but you accept all of their basic assumptions about existence.

have time to fire it up, short of a video card issue I'm dealing with.
SP2 I'm relatively sure would work just fine given what I do know. I do not connect this machine to the internet.
If you use Pace you will have to update those drivers to the spec in the XP beta driver install.
