Well its a fact that the crappiest music sells the most, so to judge yourself successful doesn't mean the music is any good.. it just means you are good at business and have some good political connections.

I dont know how many CDs your buddy sold that you've been posting about, but wouldn't you consider his music a success? At least on a personal level?> Coast is fun... makes your place look positively current... don't it? ;-) 1600x1200 and my motherboard supports that fine. I took the computer to best buy and we hooked it up to make sure it worked in win98, it looked great.

So I get it home and plug it up and it goes to 1024x768. It was because I have a 25' VGA cable and my motherboard chipset is a pussy. I put the GeForce 6200 agp card back in and it shoves electricity down the Samsungs throat and I get 1600x1200 in Win98SE finally. Unfortunately the agp card share IRQ's with my 2 EDS cards so we'll see if it works ok but at least i'm up in resolution now.

The 1600x1200 gives me 16 channels in the mixer window with 2 auxes and the Submaster fader. Very good !!!!!!!!

I literally spent over 15 hours screwing with this crap this week and I hope I'm done for a while. If I ever see DJ I'm gonna format his drive !!!

Well, back to paris land. I got a new job and the guys at work are into jamming so that will be sweet too.

Later,

On Win 98, this does not bode well at all. I think youre going to need an active repeater for your VGA cable in order to use whatever graphics card it is that doesn't share an IRQ with the AGP. I just thought I'd add one more ray of sunshine to your day before you kill me.

It's not that simple. The Beatles, the Police, the Who, and lots of other great artists sold lots of records. The measure of success for the art is on the disc, the measure of success for the product, and a product it is once it leaves their hands, is up to all of us who produce and promote it, and that measure is sales.

I do not care how many crappy records sell. I DO care when a great one does not.

Absolutely, and now he deserves to sell some CD's for doing such bitchin' work.

the really super non-commercial phonies sells a product; the only question is whether it is any good.

Yeah, I guess you could do a great album that three people bought and you could still call it a success, but what a tragedy that more didn't hear it! And I would have to say that the producer and engineer failed if no one bought it.

>you gotta let me listen to your rap tracks :)\

ahh I should've saved a copy. It was a Christian rap thing, no less with three rappers and a really good DJ. They flew it in live, all in the same room and then replaced a few tracks and fixed mistakes.

I think my style was too clean for rap, but the bottom was big,
the beats were Living Dead has gone one more step backward into retroville. I've got these routed to the sends/returns of my (discontinued) Lexicon 284 guitar amp running into the (discontinued) Lexicon SB 210 stereo cab which is being mic'ed up with a pair of (discontinued) TL Audio 2001 tube mic preamps.

I do have a hankerin' for some stuff around here that has Ampex on the front plate.. I've never seen more old Ampex machines in one place in my whole life than were at Coast. I figured they could at least spare a couple, like a 16 track 2" and a 2 track 1/2". Getting them in the back of my rented Mustang convertible would have been another story.
