You can purchase processed BFD samples. I enjoy processing drums (or just about anything....haven't you noticed?) so BFD is my preference.

;o)

The keys will hold 99 authorizations . I wouldn't feel comfortable with o ther company authorizations on the same ILOK dongle.

if something does go wrong what then? pass the key around to different companies to try and recover the authorizations? Its crazy.

I guess those concerns are nothing to lose sleep over because copy protection hardware today is so dependable ;-)

-----=_NextPart_000_007B_01C83DA6.694675F0--Hi dedric,
 The reverb seems to be more of an effect reverb not the convolution realistic type that people have been using lately. Seems to be more of a thing like the TC classicverb or Lexicon type so far.

Don't get me going on how much I-Lok sucks.
 I don't like USB dongles in general but at least with Steinberg they pretty much make so that as long as you got the dongle your good. No stupid. I must authorize the dongle then authorize the plug ins, etc.

Most all of companies allow for multiple products to b licensed on one key as long as they all use the same key.

Well except for Waves but they suck more than Avid does.

The only USB key so far that has not been completely cracked and bypassed is the WUBI Key that Magix uses. The easiest and first to be pirated was the I-Lok.
